The Premier declared that the work-The Premier declared that the workers must be prepared to share their work with less fortunate men. He spoke very strongly in repreaching the building trade for hampering the entrance of former service men. The stagnation of the purchasing power of central Europe, he said, was in consequence of the war. The whole difficulty was the establishment of credits. Everybody wanted the Government to assume the whole risk, but that was unfair because it was a risk of the taxpayer.

but that was unfair because it was a risk of the taxpayer.

The Government had falled to induce the banks to take any share in these abnormal risks, and now he appealed to the banks to take any share in these abnormal risks, and now he appealed to the banks to do so. It was in the litterest of the country's trade, and that was as much to the interest of the banks as to any other class. They were the only people who could really help, and if they did so he believed it would be possible to get a start.

The Premier emphasized the baffling fature of the Austrian problem owing to the breaking up of the industrial and commercial machinery throughout the Evidence was introduced at the hearing by secret service agents tending to show that bonds alleged to have been stolen were found in Gallen's possession with a quantity of War Savings Stamps from which the numbers had been erased by means of chemicals.

Two employees of Gallen's firm, Gallen's Co., also were held. Hugh J. Mc-Hugh, arrested on the same charge, is said to have admitted having washed numbers from registered War Savings Stamps. F. R. Fulton was arrested today on a charge of having disposed of the stolen bonds.

Bonds alleged to have been stolen from banks at Hot Springs, S. C.; Landisyille, Pa., and Elverston, Pa., were mentioned particularly by agents investigating the case, who testified that they traced them to Gallen's office. FRANCIS B.
